Lauren Jacobsen Interior Design is a boutique design firm that has been creating stunning spaces for clients for over 20 years. One of her works is the beautiful modern-contemporary farmhouse located in Tarzana, California.

As with most modern farmhouse homes, there is a neutral palette of black, white, gray and wood. Lauren is known for her love of color. In this home she utilized neutral shades as a base to ground much brighter, richer colors layered on top.

The design throughout the home is what Lauren calls “relaxed contemporary.” The house contains a mixture of natural finishes such as multiple wood species, marble, concrete and other stone. She was attracted to the idea of a more organic home with hand-crafted items and unexpected furniture silhouettes that added interest to the casual atmosphere.

Light brightly streams throughout the home's large windows. The tall ceilings, sliding glass doors, and plethora of windows allow views of the lush grounds and the pool outside.

The sliding doors are fully retractable, so they open the entire length of the wall, which creates a seamless extension of the main house to the landscape outside. This influenced the interiors to a large degree.
